TINLEY LIONS SPEAKER HITS COMMUNISM

One of the best special features that the Tinley Lions Club has put on was an address Monday night by Col. Sidney Story of the Veterans of Foreign Wars speakers bureau of Chicago. He appeared under the joint auspices of the Lions Club and the Tinley Park Post of the American Legion.

Col. Sidney Story

Mr. Story is a lecturer and traveler of national repute. In his address he pointed out with vigor that what America needs today is a merchant marine so that American products can be shipped to foreign markets without paying excessive shipping charges to foreign ship combines as is being done now. Mr. Story was instrumental in organizing before the world war the "Pan American Mail Line" between North and South America and when this line was started the foreign ship owners attempted to drive the Yankees off the seas by threatening the South American shippers with a boycott if they patronized ships flying the American flag. The speaker showed of the various efforts that have been made to undermine American shipping and our impotency on the seas. He showed one instance where ten American ships which cost ten millions of dollars to build were sold to Soviet Russia for only one million dollars.

He characterized the American nation as one of booms on account of falling for European wiles and bluffs. At the close of the world war when the merchant marine of Germany was divided among the allies, America was allotted two of the big liners, the Vaterland, and the Imperator. France received the best of the bargain. England soon discovered this and set up a cry and President Wilson kindly consented to give England the Imperator to appease them.

Mr. Story used the big stick on the cause of the present depression and the menace of communism. He pointed out that Russia with one hundred and fifty million inhabitants has one hundred and forty-nine million slaves. Wages are dirt cheap and goods produced there are flooding the world markets with the result that American goods are not selling abroad and consequently our industries are affected. Our ship building yards are idle and this means thousands of men are out of work and in addition lack of building is affecting the mines, lumber companies and other industries.

Mr. Story pointed out that a mighty war is being waged against America, not by cannon or armies, but by insidious propaganda from the communists which is poisoning the fountain heads of our nation. Public officials in Washington as well as the professors of American colleges and universities were scored for teaching treason, atheism and communism. Even the public school is being inoculated with this subtle poison. Mr. Story illustrated his point by relating a case of a child attending a Hyde Park public school who came home crying one day, declaring the teacher had told her she did not belong to her parents, but belonged to the state. The infamous nationalization of women, children and industry as advocated by the communists was touched on vividly. The speaker showed that the pernicious propaganda being spread is designed to undermine our government and overthrow the very things our forefathers fought for and bequeathed to us as a heritage.

It was charged by Mr. Story that the recent communistic uprisings in Chicago among the negroes was an example of the propaganda being spread among the ignorant classes. Hundreds of negroes are sent to Moscow each year, given communistic instruction and then sent back to America to carry on the Soviet program of communizing this nation, while our national officials are standing idly by and do not attempt to stop the open treason and revolution being preached in this country. This nation is in danger of losing its liberties and it is high time that the people realize it.

Tinley Flower Festival Proves Very Successful

The Junior Garden Club of Tinley Park held their first Flower Festival at the Saenger Hall on Wednesday afternoon. There were many enter-les of flowers and vegetables. Despite the dry, hot weather the exhibits were pretty and captured many prizes.

The big attraction was a garden scene with a stone wall about it. A wedding scene was depicted with dolls representing the bridal couple and attendants, even the bridal veil train bearers being in evidence.

The Tinley Park Royal Neighbors had a pretty exhibit by the way of a large basket of snow on the mountain and oak leaves. The arrangement was very artistic and captured first prize.

There was also a fine display of flower books compiled by members of the Junior Garden Club.

The exhibition was well attended and was a decided success. Refreshments also were served. Little girls dressed like fairies flitted in and out among the exhibits.

A complete list of exhibits and exhibitors and of prizes awarded will be published in the next issue.

Tinley Oak Trees Smitten by Strange Malady

A peculiar disease has attacked some of the age old oak trees about Tinley Park. This malady was first discovered on the Anderson place. There it was noticed the trees began to die off from the top. One large tree was cut down and it was discovered that a hole had been eaten or bored from the top of the tree straight down to the roots. Mrs. Florence Anderson wrote to the United States Forestry Department at Washington about these trees dying off and she has been advised that a tree expert will be sent here to determine just what is causing the trees to die off and what remedy can be applied to save them.

Tinley Alderman Catches Turtle Instead of Bass

Alderman Arthur Schoeneck of Tinley Park had quite an experience as a fisherman last week. He went on a bass fishing trip near Wilton Center. Soon as he had cast his line he had a bite and suddenly the cork started sailing across the water and Alderman Schoeneck thought he had a big bass at the end of the line, but great was his surprise when he hauled out a big fat turtle. The turtle waddled about the shore. A company of tourists came along and admired the turtle so much that the Alderman readily gave them Mr. Turtle. Alderman Schoeneck said the one consoling feature about the "catch" was that he saved his bass hook.

Tinley Musical Director Plans Mixed Chorus

Alexander Corado, well known musical director of Tinley Park, announces that he is contemplating the organization of a mixed chorus for Tinley Park. The men singers of the community will be invited to join the new organization. Mr. Corado will announce the date soon when the singers will be given a tryout. Watch for the date, Tinley Park has plenty of musical talent and, no doubt, Mr. Corado will find the necessary talent for his new organization.

Palos Men Open Radio Shop

Frank G. King, Jr., and B. R. Schofield have opened a new business enterprise in Palos Park by way of an expert radio service and repair shop known as the King Electric Co. They handle all makes of radios for repair or service work anywhere. Next time your radio is sick, call on these radio doctors.

length by Mr. Story was the need for an American Merchant Marine in order to make America a maritime power. The completion of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Lakes to Gulf Waterway and making Chicago a great inland seaport. This would be a great aid in developing America into a greater world power whose blessings would be reflected in all parts of the globe.

America needs many more men like Col. Story to give the public eye opening facts of conditions confronting our nation. Tho the gathering at Tinley was small, it was very much impressed with Col. Story's vital message.

Tinley Ball Team Loses to Oak Forest

A real snappy ball game was played Sunday between the Oak Forest Young Men's Club and the Tinley Park ball club. There were plenty of thrills and all present witnessed a real game Tinley put up a hot battle but lost to Oak Forest. Next Sunday the home team meets a very powerful team from Chicago "The Beverly Stars", on the home ground. Come out and support the team and you will see a good game. Game called at 3 p. m. Orland Park Has Many Beautiful Flower Gardens

There are many lovely gardens in and around Orland Park. One of the outstanding ones is that of Mrs. H. Melchor. It is a most entrancing sight to stand near the east entrance and see before you the gentle rolling land with its carpet of even green, and the tall shapely trees of oak and hickory, standing just as nature planted them many years ago keeping watch over the things below and also giving their lovely shade.

The rose section is beautiful and one finds there roses of most every description and color. The fish pond and lily pool surrounded by a rock garden, just suitable for a pool of this kind, where choice lilies are constantly blooming and where the fish appear to be very happy with their lovely home, is indeed entrancing. The bird sanctuary and the golf putt is not to be over looked.

Surrounding this place of three acres are Lombardy poplars and flowers of every kind and hue. Mrs. Melchor is training vines of bitter-sweet to cover the wire fence surrounding the garden and this will be a lovely sight when fully grown. She is also planning to plant a bog garden.

Another feature are the two holly trees which are hale and hearty and growing splendidly. But the most lovely thing about this garden is the naturalness which has not been impaired by cultivation.

New Business Block For Tinley Park

Wm. Funk, former mayor of Tinley Park is starting the ball rolling to revive building activity in Tinley Park and to beautify the town. He has purchased the property formerly owned by his father Jacob Funk, extending from Oak Park avenue to the street on which the Tinley Park school is located east of Oak Park ave. Mr. Funk has had a few of the old buildings torn down or moved. The dwelling occupied by the Gother family is to be moved further to the east and faced south.

Mr. Funk plans to erect a modern brick apartment house on the front part of the lot, also a restaurant, ice cream parlor. Construction work will be started this fall.

FORMER TINLEY DOCTOR LOCATES AT KIRLAND

Dr. A. Ickstadt former Tinley Park physician who moved to California a year ago, has returned to Illinois and is now located at Kirland, Illinois.

TINLEY PARK ROSE CHAPTER GARDEN CLUB HOLDS MEETING

The Rose Chapter Garden Club met at the Towle residence Friday evening. The meeting was called to order at 8:30 o'clock and minutes were read by the new secretary, Mrs. Elmer Chapman.

The members feel that credit is due Mrs. Chapman for the wonderful way she is taking care of her work.

The newest member of the club received a great deal of attention. She is the six weeks old daughter of the treasurer, Mrs. Vernon Murray.

The subject for the evening was on the Iris and Evergreen.

Plans were made for the club's second annual picnic.

While coffee was being made, bunco was played and prizes were won by the following: 1st prize, 6 tulip bulbs won by Mrs. Kleven. Second prize, box of oriental poppy seeds won by Mrs. M. Bernadine. Third prize box of blanket flower seeds won by Mrs. Kleven.

Mrs. Kleven will be the hostess at the next meeting, date to be announced later.

Mrs. Louis Groth Of Mokena Dies

Mrs. Louis Groth, aged 68 years, passed away quite suddenly at her home in Mokena following a brief illness, Friday morning. She is survived by her husband and one son. She was a former resident of Orland township and located here several years ago. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon from the late home to the Immanuel Lutheran church in Mokena, Rev. Paul Schauer officiating. Burial was made in the Lutheran cemetery.

Palos Park Is Scene of Open Air Wedding

A very pretty wedding was held on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde A. Shultz, Saturday afternoon, the first of August when their daughter Ellen Emma was united in marriage to Delmar Edward Boatman. Rev. Wayne A. Gerrard of St. Adrian's Episcopal church of Blue Island performed the ceremony.

The bridal party consisted of Miss Catherine Soems, maid of honor, the bride's sister Alice Kate Shultz and Miss Dorothy Wells were bridesmaids. They were dressed in pale blue and carried bouquets of pink larkspur. The best man was Martin Soems and the groomsmen were Rev. Windmar Thomas, minister of the Palos Presbyterian church and Jack Rosen of Chicago.

The bride wore white and her mother's veil and a wreath worn by her grandmother fifty years ago and carried a shower bouquet of cream tea roses. The bride's great uncle and aunt Mr. and Mrs. Frank Breckenridge of Clemencium, Arizona and her great aunt, Miss Helen Campbell were among the sixty guests present.

Frankfort Twp. to Select Delegate To Tax Meeting

Last Thursday a large number of taxpayers of Frankfort township met with other taxpayers and assessors of Will County in the court house in Joliet to discuss the matter of tax reduction with the board of review. George Thompson, well known farmer of Frankfort was appointed chairman for Frankfort township. A meeting is to be held later in each township and delegates chosen to attend the county meeting with the state tax men at a date to be announced later to equalize the tax reduction for Will County.

At present Mokena valuations have been doubled and otherwise increased, a fact which the tax payers find hard to understand, and which our local assessor and our local precinct committeeman do not explain, but who the taxpayers feel should enlighten them, as they look to these gentlemen to safe guard their interests.

Much property in the village of Mokena is listed as farm property and if allowed to remain as such will not carry village taxes and thus the village funds will suffer. Why not have the assessors treat all alike say the taxpayers.

1931 KANKAKEE FAIR TO SET MANY RECORDS

Newness Characterizes Features Shown at Big Fair.

Splashed with the reflected glory of its illustrious predecessors, the 1931 Kankakee Inter-State Fair is being rapidly molded into an exhibition which for sheer magnificence and splendor of scope and scene will stand without an equal.

Headed by an impressive array of the foremost entertainers and performers to be found in the modern show world, who were selected after an exhaustive search extending over many months and which will continue until the eve of the exposition, this year's Fair will bring together the most outstanding group of amusement attractions ever assembled by any American exposition.

Augmented by innumerable additions to cash premiums and generous increases in many other instances, every branch of this mammoth display, which covers all aspects of a live stock, agricultural, industrial, and domestic exposition, indicates that all former records will be left far behind when the Fair swings under way August 15 to run continuously until the night of August 21.

The $15,000 Society Horse Show promises to be exceptionally fine this year. Eighty-six classes are scheduled to be shown during the afternoons and evenings in front of the grandstand, and the remarkably high stakes being offered this season ensure the finest and largest aggregation of high-strung blue-bloods to be found in the country.

The Kankakee Inter-State Fair will open on Saturday, August 15. This will mark the first time in many years that the Kankakee Fair has had its opening day on Saturday.

The 1931 $100,000 Kankakee Inter-State Fair Premium List is just off the press and a copy may be secured by addressing Len. Small, Secretary, Kankakee Inter-State Fair, First Trust and Savings Bank Building, Kankakee, Illinois.

TINLEY PARK BAND MOVEMENT SIDETRACKED

The movement for organizing a community band in Tinley Park, appears to be sidetracked for the present at least. A meeting was called for last Friday night at the Tinley Legion Community Hall for the purpose of determining how many were interested in the band, but there was no attendance. Representatives, from Lyon & Healy were present. It has been decided that instead of having any more meetings, that the Lyon & Healy men make a personal canvass of the town and interview the prospective band members.

STATE CAPITOL NEWS

Hiram L. Williamson, Illinois State Geologist.

The Illinois state geological survey division has just published an Educational Bulletin No. 3, on "Typical Rocks and Minerals in Illinois." The booklet is especially adapted for use in schools and was written primarily to accompany sets of rocks and minerals which the division is distributing to high schools throughout the state. This publication, the third of a series, with Bulletin No. 1 on "The Geologic Making of the Southern Illinois" and No. 2 on "The Rock River Country of Northern Illinois" may be secured free of charge for use in schools anywhere in the state of Illinois and will be supplied to the general public at a cost of ten cents each by addressing the Chief, State Geological Survey, Urbana.

Illinois libraries report an unusual increase in the number of books circulated for home reading. Unemployed men and women have turned to the libraries in this time of business depression, reading not only for recreation but for information, and for aid in increasing their business opportunities and values. Recognizing the fact that a similar increase in circulation in libraries over the United States has been noticed, the American Library association at a recent annual conference urges that the governors and legislatures of the various states and all public officials of counties, cities and towns allow no reduction of appropriations for books and service, but to maintain the libraries in their full efficiency in this period of special need.

A history of the coal industry of Illinois, as thorough and authentic as painstaking research can produce, has been placed in circulation by John G. Millhouse, director of the state department of mines and minerals. The book is entitled, "A Compilation of the Coal Reports of Illinois, 1882 to 1930." Chapters one and two are principally historical; chapter three reviews Illinois' mining laws; chapter four records and summarizes the state's coal mine disasters; chapters five to nine tell of the development of the various branches of service that the state performs in connection with the coal mining industry; and concluding chapters deal with the division of metal mine inspection. An appendage consists of a tribute to the memory of Walton Rutledge, an account of the Cherry mine disaster, and a story of a peculiar mining disaster that took place at Pinckneyville in 1880.

The arrangements being made by the Southern Illinois penitentiary at Menard to supply free limestone f. o. b. Menard, will be of particular benefit to farmers of the southern portion of the state who were hard hit by the drought of last year. This will be supplied in accordance with the provisions of the bill approved recently by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson, and the department of public welfare will fill requests as rapidly as possible, and in the order in which they are received. It is suggested that farmers who desire the service write for order blanks to Mr. James A. White, warden of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary.

The horseshoe tossers of Illinois who would share in the distribution of cash prizes at the Illinois State fair are welcome to enter the contest to be held during their annual convention at the Illinois State fair on Wednesday evening, August 26, in conjunction with the state championship tournament.

Mass production methods, a charge often aimed at large educational institutions, will be pushed farther back with the enrollment of University of Illinois freshmen this fall, reads an announcement from the faculty committee which has been developing a new registration system. Practically an entire week will be given over to a serious but friendly and cordial attempt to get the incoming freshman off to a proper start. It will be a week of instruction and advisement, at the end of which it is felt that the new students will so thoroughly understand the university and its purpose, as well as their own capabilities and responsibilities, that the mortality rate among the yearlings will be greatly reduced and their future immeasurably helped.

From questionnaires sent to twenty-five cities in the United States, fifteen larger than Springfield and ten considered in Springfield's population class, Springfield ranks high in the way it handles traffic and shows its present system of traffic operation and traffic lights to be about as standard as any.

Announcement is made of the formation of a firm for the practice of law under the name of Castle, Osborn & Weiss, 1717 Conway building, 111 West Washington street, Chicago. The members are Howard P. Castle, former member of the house of representatives, Harper E. Osborn, and Walter W. Weiss.

William J. Stratton, secretary of state, who has been seriously ill at his home in Ingleside for several months is recovering rapidly and plans to be in his office soon.

The distribution of live pheasants is now well under way. The birds are being liberated only on leased land and will be protected by game protectors. Shipments have been sent to Vermilion, Platt, McLean, Logan, Woodford, Macoupin, and Greene counties. Birds will be released in other counties to complete the stocking of shooting grounds which now amount to more than 100,000 acres.

Col. Richings J. Shand is expected to retire from the position of United States disbursing officer, August 18, when he will have reached the federal age limit. He will continue, however, to serve in his capacity of assistant adjutant general.

From statistics given out by the department of labor it is shown that hand loading is the most perilous job in the mines. Out of 5,472 mine accidents in 1930 2,273 happened to hand loaders. Persons engaged in surface occupations incident to mining had 493 accidents during the year, while underground occupation accidents totaled 4,979. With 496 accidents, cutting machine men had the next highest number of mishaps.

The state fair better babies conference has registered 414 names representing thirty-one counties. A short time still remains for registrations and this offers a splendid opportunity for the parents of children who have not succeeded very well in school and whose health has not been robust. Both mental and physical examinations are given at the conference.

Although Friday, August 28, has been designated as Farm Bureau day, farmers attending the State fair will find the big tent conveniently located on the grounds open all during the week with some one of the I. A. A. office in charge. Farmers and their families will be welcome at headquarters at any time where there will be plenty of chairs, ice water, a free check room for parcels and a ladies' rest room.

Notices of bids on rates of interest Illinois' banks will pay if state funds are placed on deposit with them have been sent out to state and national banks in Illinois. There are now about 750 banks designated as state depositories, paying 3 per cent interest on inactive accounts and 2 per cent interest on daily balances on active accounts against which checks are drawn. The interest goes into the state treasury. The proposals will be opened Monday, September 7, by State Treasurer Edward J. Barrett in the presence of State Auditor Oscar Nelson and Garrett DeF. Kinney, director of finance.

The Illinois state tax commission is speeding up its work so that a tentative total of assessments may be available at an early date in order that a study may be given the revenue needs of the state before the meeting of the rate board to fix the state tax rate. The commission also expects to have assessments on railroads and capital stock ready for county clerks before the first of the year, thus avoiding delay in extension of local taxes.

Upon his arrival at Goteburg, Sweden, United States Congressman Wm. E. Hull was eagerly interviewed by the representative of the Goteburg daily, My Tid, in regard to the Volstead act. Mr. Hull expressed himself as desirous of making a thorough study of the Bratt system of temperance control employed in Sweden with the view of suggesting a possible compromise between the Swedish system and our Eighteenth amendment as a more effective way of solving our prohibition problem. Mr. Griffin, who accompanied Mr. Hull, expressed himself as more interested in the Russian situation. No doubt they will both bring back many constructive ideas.

When United States Senator J. Hamilton Lewis recently spoke at ceremonies in Chicago in which he presented the national colors to the First battalion of the Twenty-fourth regiment of marines, he declared that the United States navy "is one navy of all the world that is a navy of defense and under no orders for preparation of assault."

Howard F. O'Brien, Chicago, spoke of work being done to secure compensation for the veterans and Theodore Lindstrom, also of Chicago, told of the things necessary for a veteran to prove that he had a compensation coming to him before a meeting of members of the Springfield chapter of Disabled American Veterans of the World War held recently in G. A. R. hall.

The state court of claims allows about 14 per cent of the money it is asked for, while remaining requests are turned down as announced from a summary of the court's work for the last biennium. Claims denied totaled $1,219,744.55, while amounts cut off other claims totaled $185,932.81 making a grand total of $1,405,677.36 denied. The court allowed claims amounting to $198,075.09.

Enrollment plans for the twenty-second annual State Fair Boys' school provides for a selected student body of 321 boys. Each of the 102 counties in Illinois is entitled to representation in the assembly of students, on the basis of their 1930 population, Cook county being limited to 15. The rule for selecting students to represent each county authorize three local officials, the county superintendent of schools, the president of the county farmers' institute, and the chairman of the county board, to name the county's delegate.

POULTRY

FIT CHICKENS FOR EXHIBIT AT FAIRS

Must Be at Their Best to Carry Off Prizes.

Before chickens can win many prizes at fall fairs, they must be carefully selected and fitted for the show. It is only by a careful, systematic examination that one can find all the faults of a bird.

"Before selecting the birds to be entered, place the males in individual coops and the females either in these individual coops or small group coops," advises C. F. Parrish, extension poultryman. "Those having many birds to condition may equip a building for the purpose, though most small exhibitors use temporary quarters. The important thing is to have the birds where they may be handled easily at any time without the possibility of making them wild or breaking the plumage."

Mr. Parrish does not advise force feeding to get the birds in shape. There are times, however, when a few extra ounces of flesh may turn a decision in a bird's favor. Extra feeding may also help to develop a better plumage. The best way to go about getting these desirable attributes is in the addition of a more concentrated and palatable feed to the regular ration.

Practically all white birds are washed before exhibiting. One that has not been washed looks out of place in strong competition. Four tubs are needed to do this effectively. In the first, the water must be warm and plenty of soap suds used. This is rinsed off in gradually cooler water in the other three tubs, with bluing added to the last one. After washing, allow the bird to stand in a dripping coop for 30 minutes before going into the exhibition coop to dry completely.

Use of Artificial Light in Henhouse Indorsed

The use of artificial light in the houses of the laying hens in September and October is proving a profitable practice on many New Jersey farms, reports C. S. Platt, research specialist at the state college of agriculture, New Brunswick. It has, explains Mr. Platt, the advantage of prolonging the length of the day in the early fall and seems to give an increased egg production in the months when large eggs are demanding a premium price. This is an extension in the use of artificial lights, which heretofore have been used exclusively on pullets and solely in the winter.

Any system of artificial light may be used, starting it when the daylight or working hours for the hens fall below thirteen. If the morning system is used, the lights are put on from 4:30 a. m. until daylight. The evening system calls for lights from dusk until 6:30 or 7 p. m., and the evening lunch system from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m.

The purpose of the light, of course, is to increase the food consumption. For best results 100 birds should consume from 10 to 12 pounds of grain daily and an equal amount of mash. Moist mash may be fed to good advantage.

The light should be discontinued about November 1, and the birds allowed to go through a resting period of two or three months.

No Place for Roosters Among the Laying Hens

"Farmers of the central states lose $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year on account of producing eggs that are fertile. When they move into commerce they are removed and destroyed," says Paul Mandeville, secretary of the United States Egg society.

"A more serious loss occurs," Mandeville says further, "from slowing down consumption of all eggs while these poor eggs are being forced on unwilling buyers. It is well known that a chief advantage of handling California eggs is the fact that they are infertile."

Remove all roosters, young and old, from the laying flock.

Poultry Hints

Unless the range is clean, chickens may be kept in a house as surgically clean as an operating room yet die from filth diseases. Not the food put before them but what they can get outside is responsible for intestinal disorders of poultry.

The use of barley to replace yellow corn in poultry rations should be determined by the relative prices of the two grains and the availability of sources of vitamin A.

In the opinion of many poultry specialists broilers should be sent to market as soon as they are salable. As the chick makes the most rapid growth during the first few weeks of its life, it costs more and takes longer to put on weight after it has reached a pound in weight.

Ground barley is a satisfactory substitute for ground yellow corn in a standard laying mash when the scratch grain is composed of a large per cent of shelled yellow corn and green feed is available for the birds.

Lesson for August 16

SOWING AND REAPING
(Temperance Lesson.)

LESSON TEXT—Galatians 6:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Obeying the Law.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Obeying the Law.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Sowing and Reaping (Effects of Alcohol).

In chapters three and four Paul presented in a masterful way the heart of Christianity; namely, that justification is by faith in the atoning work of Christ rather than by the works of the law. In chapters five and six he made practical application of the doctrine to the affairs of life. Gracious justification by faith is the dynamic for right living. Those who are freely justified in Christ will manifest the fact by the following conduct:

I. Restore the Sinning Brother (v. 1).

1. Who he is. "The one overtaken in a fault." The idea expressed by the word "fault" is not to minimize the sin, but to show the suddenness of the temptation. One's spirituality is shown by his willingness to help in such a case.

2. What is to be done. He is to be "restored." Restore is a surgical term which means the placing back of a dislocated member to its normal place. Christians are members of the body of Christ. Therefore, the sinning of a brother should as really give us pain as the dislocation of a member of our body.

3. How it is to be done. "In a spirit of meekness." Harshness has no place in the life of a Christian. The fruit of the Spirit is love, meekness, etc. The believer must show his right to claim the life in the heavens by stooping down to help the brother crippled and besmeared in the dirt of earth.

4. The incentive. "Lest thou also be tempted." No one is immune from temptation. The surest way to be fortified against temptation is to go sympathetically to the rescue of the fallen.

II. Bear One Another's Burdens (v. 2).

Many are the burdens of life: burdens of weakness, temptations of a fallen nature, sorrow, suffering, and sin. Some have more temptations than others. Since believers are inseparably bound together, the strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. Christ is the supreme burden bearer. When we bear one another's burdens, we fulfill the law of Christ. Many have inherited the appetite for intoxicating liquors, and the spirit of burden bearing will move us to make our utmost endeavor to remove far away the temptation to strong drink.

III. Bear Our Own Burdens (vv. 3-5).

There are some burdens which can be borne alone by the individual. Personal responsibility cannot be escaped. In a most real sense every man lives his life alone. Helpful as is sympathy, human and divine, greatly as we need the helping hand of our brother, the individual must live his own life. The law of God which is in harmony with the law which controls the individual declares, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

IV. Support Teachers of God's Word (vv. 6-8).

It is incumbent upon those who are taught in God's Word to give of their means for the support of the teacher. To repudiate this obligation is to mock God (v. 7), for God has ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel (1 Cor. 9:14). The declaration, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," sets forth a law which operates in all spheres of life.

V. Be Earnest in Well Doing (v. 9).

The harvest is sure. Sow good seed and patiently wait for the reward. The same unfeeling law which eventuates in a harvest of corruption to those who sow to the flesh will bring life everlasting to those who sow to the Spirit.

VI. Work for the Good of All Men (v. 10).

The believer in Christ who realizes his freedom will have sympathies and interests as wide as the race. While especially endeavoring to help those in Christ, he will be reaching out to all men. He will be seeking to win them to Christ. This obligation to work for the good of all men applies in such matters as the abolition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages.

The Righteous

The righteous as are trees of life; the fruits of their piety and charity, their instructions, reproaches, examples and prayers, their interest in heaven and their influence on earth are like the fruits of that tree, precious and useful, contributing to the support and nourishment of the spiritual life in many.—Matthew Henry.

When Learning Is Useful

Education is useful, but when it ignores God it is destructive.—Babson.

POETS HAVE SUNG
GLORY OF SUNDIAL

"What a dead thing is a clock," says Charles Lamb, "with its ponderous embowements of lead and brass, its pert or solemn dullness of communication, compared with the simple altar-like structure and silent heart-language of the old dial!" He thought that, if the business uses of the dial had to be superseded by more elaborate inventions, its moral uses and its beauty might have pleaded for its continuance. To him the dial spoke of "moderate labors, of pleasures not protracted after sunset, of temperance and good hours; it was the primitive clock, the horologe of the first world. Adam could scarce have missed it in Paradise."

The sundial as a thing of beauty and a joy forever has more than fulfilled his desire for continuance in the century that has passed since the death of Elia. Nearly all formal gardens, and many lesser ones, add the sundial as a "measure for sweet plants and flowers to spring by, for birds to apportion their silver warblings by," but not "for flocks to pasture and be led to fold by."

Many books have been written about the mottoes attached to the sundials; about the different forms they take and where they may be placed and by what surroundings. Every one knows of the classical thought found by Hazlitt on a sundial near Venice: "I count only the hours that are serene." Queen Alexandra may have read his dissertation on it, or she may have had a twin-thought expressing itself at the same time, for on her dial at Sandringham there is a motto chosen by the queen herself: "Let others tell of storms and showers, I only count the sunny hours." But, as Hazlitt says, if hours were all serene we would take as little notice of them as the dial does of those that are clouded. It is the shadow thrown across that gives us warning of their flight. The cave man's great rock upon which was cast the shadow of a long pole driven into the ground, may have been the forshadowing of the appearance of the sundial which is of ancient origin and of many and diverse forms. The dial of Ahaz, mentioned in the Old Testament, supposedly about 700 B. C., is about the first we hear of it. Two centuries later, Pliny claims the honor of having invented the sundial, for the Greek scientist Anaximander. Another two centuries go by and we hear that the high priest Berossus, not being satisfied with a shaft, like Cleopatra's Needle, because the shadows varied from day to day, according to the position of the sun, invented a clever way of marking time correctly by making the dial hollow like the inside of a bowl. The shadow was cast by a little round ball or bead at the end of a pointer that stood horizontally out over the bowl. Many centuries later, similar devices were found in the ruins of Pompeii, and in the gardens of Cicero's villa near Tuscum.

Sundials were often surrounded by masses of roses, or sunflowers (which were Hazlitt's preference), or by tall hollyhocks, larkspur, coreopsis, and all the old-fashioned flowers so much in use today. The sundial seems to have a very particular fascination for the poets. I found three different sundials to which Henry Van Dyke gave tribute. For the class of 1904 at Wells college, he wrote of the sundial: The shadow by my finger cast Divides the future from the past. Before it, sleeps the unborn hour, In darkness and beyond thy power. Behind its unreturning line, The vanished hour, no longer thine. One hour alone is in thy hands— The Now on which the shadow stands.

Odd Drinking Vessels

Steins for drinking Tibetan beer are equipped with permanent straws, or have mouthpieces in their handles, a collection of drinking vessels put on display at the Field Museum of Natural History, in Chicago, revealed. Other cups are made from the horns of wild yaks. Tibetans use them for drinking arak, a liquor similar to beer.

Ash Receivers

"Saw some neat ash receivers for the card table. They represented the queen of hearts."

"I should think they'd use the tray."

The Ruse

"Jimmy, Aunt Louise will never kiss you with that dirty face."

"That's what I figured."

Friendship Marred by

Distance in New York

In New York city it is possible to know an infinite variety of good citizens. You may scrape up an acquaintance with showgirls, professors of applied therapeutics, novelists, pugilists, Hindu swamis, tabloid reporters, toe dancers and captains of South American banana boats. You may even become warm friends of a bibliomaniac or a Hoboken bartender.

But what good will they do you? If you live in the Bronx, your best friends invariably live in Flatbush, and if you live on City Island, the boon companions you are just dying to see always reside in Jamaica or Jersey City.

So that if you are projecting an hour's friendly call, you have to travel on the subways two hours; you are mauled by the theater crowd, and manhandled by the downtown warehouse watchmen going uptown to sleep and the uptown swells going downtown to play.

And when you arrive at your friend's house at 10:00 p. m., limp and shopworn, you find, of course, that he has quit waiting for you and has gone to a Rumanian fish house three blocks from your home which you left two hours ago.

Friendship in New York becomes too often a terrific chore. It is far easier to be content with the casual folk you rub against where your business or your thirst takes you. As a rule, therefore, the "people to your taste" are not to your taste in any deeper, spiritual sense, but they simply frequent the same resort or restaurant you do and are tolerable only because they can speak your jargon of art or business and do not attempt to assault you with beer mugs.—Ernest L. Meyer in the Forum and Century.

Air Mileage Record

The greatest daily airplane mileage between any two cities in the United States is flown between Atlanta and New York, with three scheduled round trips, mail and passenger, each day, according to Collier's Weekly. The Washington-New York airway ranks second, with 11 round trips daily. The total daily mileage in this country is 120,000.

Human Interchange

"Hiram," said Mrs. Cornstossel, "what is the new hired man complaining about?"

"He isn't really complainin'," replied Farmer Cornstossel. "Talkin' about his troubles is just a hired man's way of bein' sociable and friendly."

Movable Set

"My dear sir," said the doctor, "your physical troubles are due entirely to your defective teeth. Now let me examine them."

"All right, doctor," muttered the patient, "hold out your hand."

"Your husband doesn't yawp about his first sweetheart any more."

"Nope, he saw her the other day, after twenty years."

No man is suited for friendship, who can't be close-mouthed.

A stingy man may not care for friends. He doesn't seek them.

Children Know Good Peanut Butter

YOUNGSTERS say, "Be sure to get Monarch Peanut Butter. It tastes just like peanuts." Monarch Peanut Butter is made in spotless clean kitchens by clean workers from the finest grade of selected Virginia peanuts. Every particle of "skin" and bitter germ or "heart" is carefully removed. The result is a delicious, smooth spread for bread or toast that has all the natural taste and flavor of good freshly roasted peanuts.

Baseball News

Frankfort 1; Matteson 0

Anyone who enjoys a good baseball game should have seen the game at Matteson last Sunday. That game was worth a quarter of anybody's money. A first class game all the way through, three double plays being made, one by Matteson and two by Frankfort, a regular pitcher's battle between Schaefer, for Matteson, and McMillan, for Frankfort, and, although McMillan had a shade the better of the argument, Errors lost the game for Matteson.

Frankfort's run which won the game, was not an earned run, but, regardless of that fact, it decided the winner, and that was all Frankfort cared about.

The box score, shown below, shows how close this game was. McMillan struck out fourteen, but he walked three and hit two, while Schaefer fanned seven and didn't give a pass on hit a batter. This may indicate that Schaefer had the better control, but Frankfort got four hits off his delivery while Matteson got only two off McMillan, one in the first and one in the ninth. Frankfort got their hits, one at a time, in the first, third, fourth, and ninth so their hits were not close enough together to do any good.

Besides taking the honors in pitching, McMillan also made the only extra base hit in the game, when he tripled to right field in the third inning, his first time at bat.

There were others in the game, and they all helped to win. Dittrich seemed to be the only one who could hit Schaefer's pitching, he got three hits in four times at bat, he fled out to the third baseman, Nordberg once. He also figured in one of the double plays.

Then there was Cheney, catching, and Mager, playing second, they put Kenihoff across the plate for the one run which won the game. Kenihoff fouled the first pitch but got to first on the next one when Schultz, shortstop for Matteson, stuck out his glove to get Kenihoff's grounder, but failed to hold the ball. Kenihoff went to second when Becker, catching for Matteson, dropped a pitched ball, and got to third when Mager grounded out to Schaefer, Matteson pitcher, scoring on Cheney's sacrifice fly to left field.

Kohlhagen, Harnack and Ehler, out in the field, had a very quiet day. There was only one fly knocked to the outfield, and Kohlhagen got that Ricketts, at first, played good ball, taking eight throws without an error.

Matteson came near taking the old ball game away from Frankfort in the eighth, Schultz got a walk and Lauer grounded to McMillan, who threw to second too late to get Schultz, and both of them moved up on a passed ball, with nobody down. It looked bad for Frankfort right at that time, but Bobby McMillan tricked Schultz into running for the plate when he picked up Shamhorst's grounder and made a blue to throw first. Bob turned around and threw to Cheney, at the plate, and Cheney threw to Kenihoff, at third, who tagged Schultz before he could get back to the bag. That was one down, with a man on first and second, but F. Schaefer struck out, which made two down. Matteson was not done yet. Becker got hit with the ball, so the bases were loaded, but Bobby burned 'em in, what I mean, and Artie Schaefer struck out.

The Church Board will meet August 27 to consider post vacation plans for the church.

"The Quest of Happiness" was the minister's sermon theme for August 9. It was pointed out that both joy and sorrow have their common source in moral sensitivity. When we shut our hearts unwittingly separate ourselves from a potential source of happiness. With the drawing together of nations and peoples unprecedented possibilities for increased sympathy arise. But because sympathy involves sorrow as well as joy and because we want the latter without the former, we insulate ourselves from the needs of others with callousness and indifference. Our only hope for a genuine happiness lies in our recognizing frankly that the sources of joy are also potential sources of sorrow and pain.

Would you be surprised to learn that religion is of vital importance to health, prosperity and every interest of life? Be open-minded and visit our services.

The Cost of A Funeral

"How much should a funeral cost?"

This is a question we often hear, or see in the eyes of those who are confronted by an unfamiliar problem.

The answer is simple. A funeral may cost as much or as little as the desires and the financial circumstances of the family warrant. In our display room we offer a wide choice of merchandise, representing full value for the price. And the intangible elements of our service, sympathy, reverence and reliability, are the same for all, regardless of cost.

The Beautiful
Ford Tudor Sedan

$490

(F. O. B. Detroit, plus freight and delivery.
Bumpers and spare tire extra at low cost.)

WHEN you buy a Ford car today, you buy what is unquestionably the greatest value in the history of the Ford Motor Company. Never before has so much beauty, comfort, safety and performance been offered at such a low price.

The low price of the Ford is something to think about because it means an immediate saving of many dollars — always an important consideration. But far more significant than price alone is what you get for that price. When high quality is combined with low price, you may justly take pride in having found a most satisfactory purchase.

See the Ford — ride in it — learn something about the value that is built into every part. The more you know about it, the more certain you will be that it is the car for you. It is literally true that when you "get the facts you will get a Ford."

Chapter X

"QUICK—CALL PUBLIC SERVICE!"

IN an emergency it is becoming a first thought. "Call a doctor . . . the police . . . the Public Service Company."

It happened again near Ottawa, Illinois, a few weeks ago.

The weather was sizzling hot and a group of happy families were splashing in the Fox River, enjoying the cool relief of a midsummer dip. Children and grownups were having a grand time.

Suddenly a cry of excited alarm. A child was missing. The frantic scream of a woman. The quick terror that strikes its blow with the realization of impending tragedy. It was twenty minutes before someone's foot in the water touched the little body. Was there a chance of saving her? No one knew quite how to try. And everyone was frightened.

"Quick—call Public Service!" Someone said it. John Scannell, a gas fitters' foreman, and two other Public Service Company employees arrived before the police. With an experience that comes from training, Scannell immediately applied the prone pressure method of resuscitation which the Company had taught him as a matter of routine for all employees. For five . . . ten minutes he worked. Nothing happened. It seemed certain that life had left the little body.

But Scannell worked on, smoothly, rhythmically, letting his own weight force air into the child's lungs. After fifteen minutes there was a stir of life. The police arrived but their pulmotor was discarded for the smooth, hopeful efficiency of the trained worker. It wasn't long after that the child was breathing regularly. Today she is probably playing with her dolls.

Her name is Bernadine McConnaughey.

In a letter to the Company, Ottawa's Police Chief said: "We know that her life was saved through the efficient manner in which John Scannell and other members of his squad of your Company applied the Schaefer method. We thank you in behalf of the city, parents and friends of this little girl and also the Police Department."

It was chance that made a hero out of John Scannell, but it wasn't chance that made him an expert in the Schaefer method of resuscitation. The nature of the Company's business pointed out the value of that training years ago. It was made a part of the Company's regulations. Men, women, linemen, laborers, clerks, salesmen, managers—everyone is given the instruction.

The Company has no records of all the cases where people have been revived through the knowledge its employees have of life-saving and first aid. In 1926, the President of the Company established the Britton & Budd Medal for the Saving of Human Life. Twenty employees have been given the award and eight more are expected to receive it this year. Most of the cases have been outside of business—employees on their vacations, on their way home from work, off duty.

Of course the Company is proud of John Scannell. And it is also proud of the hundreds of other employees who could have done the same thing.

Machines That Are Almost Human

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Invisible Policeman

RECENTLY in New York city a $50 bill was offered to any person who could pick it up without causing an invisible policeman to sound an alarm. No one got the $50.

The invisible policeman on guard was an unseen ray. It was set up at a meeting of the New York Illuminating Engineering society in the Westinghouse Lamp company.

The bill was put in a five-foot safe with the door closed but unlocked. Somewhere athwart the safe, probably across the door, an ultra-violet ray of light was placed. The ray could not be seen. It was harmless; it could not be felt by the human touch.

The ray "shone" upon a photo-electric eye some distance away. Anyone attempting to take the $50 bill from the safe would interrupt the ray, thereby casting on unseen "shadow" upon the electrical eye. Thereupon the eye would loudly ring a burglar alarm.

"With these rays," said Mr. McCoy, "it is possible for jewelers, bankers and other custodians to add greatly to the security of their valuables. It can be made impossible for an intruder to move about without detection, as the rays can be placed at various angles in a room. They may operate a tear gas barrage, or set off a silent alarm. Then can be projected far enough to protect the entire mouth of a harbor in war time with a warning signal belt."

One of these invisible policemen now stands at a gate in Springfield, Mass., and counts automobiles as they pass on the adjoining road. The robot has no physical contact with the passing automobiles. No wires stretch across the road to flash a signal when a car passes.

The unseen ray of light is used. When an automobile passes, it breaks the ray, and the mechanism within the robot adds another to the total of the cars that have passed.

This new "black light" is being used more and more extensively to expose fraud. It can disclose forgeries and counterfeit money. It has been used even to trap bootleggers. The makers of industrial alcohol can put a very small dose of some fluorescent dye in their alcohol, and the dye will "shine" when the unseen ray is directed on it, no matter how much the bootlegger had "cooked" or otherwise tried to disguise his product.

A new "fever tube" giving off rays similar to this, developed in the radio research laboratory of the General Electric company at Schenectady, N. Y., has aroused in the mind of its inventor, Dr. W. R. Whitney, director of the laboratory, the thought that radio may eventually be used to heat the roomers instead of the room.

It may be possible, he holds, by using an adaptation of the fever tube to supply heat to the occupants of homes and office buildings instead of heating the homes or buildings themselves. We heat thousands of cubic feet of space, he asks, merely to keep a body warm. Maintain sufficient heat in the person instead of an excess of steam in radiators.

Doctor Whitney's fever tube sends off unseen rays of heat that are absorbed by the body upon which they are directed, but which are not felt in the sense of being hot to the touch.

His suggestion is that his device might be placed in the walls of a room, the rays directed across the path of greatest activity, and then, with windows open, no furnace in the cellar and no radiators to look after, the inhabitants would be comfortably warm.

Scientists are making wide use of these unseen rays and variations of it. A weird light has been produced that causes moving objects to slow down or appear still. This light, resembling a huge flash light, turned on a whirling electric fan, caused it to look as though the blades were at rest.

Engineers have used this to find out what caused erosion on the tips of airplane propellers during a rain. The "light" made it possible to see the cracks forming in the blades when artificial rain was turned on while they were in motion, and this showed how to protect propellers against this.

Curious Colloquialisms

Queer names are given to the local holidays in northern villages in England. The district round Huddersfield alone supplies a rich variety. At Slaithwaite the strange title of "San-jemis" was used to the end of last century, and it still lingers, maybe. At Honley they have a "feast," at Almondbury a "rush," at Longwood a "thump," and at Kirkheaton a "rant." Meltham has one almost as curious as Slaithwaite: it is, or was, called a "bartleby." There must be dozens of others, although the "wakes" and the "feasts" are probably in a huge majority.

On the Dot

"In some parts of China," says a New York writer, "they tell us, people are able to tell the time more or less accurately by looking at the eyes of a cat."

Skill in this art is not confined to the Flowery kingdom. Highbrows, too, when a man sees a pair of cat's eyes gleaming on a fence at night, and gets hold of a missile, it is time for the animal to leap down. This is the last word in accuracy.

Search for Treasure Hidden by Notorious Bandit 150 Years Ago

Athens, Greece.—Treasure amassed by the notorious Ali Pasha of Tepeleni, who terrorized the Balkans 150 years ago, is being sought near Janina, in northern Greece, where the pasha held his court.

Working from recently discovered documents, archeologists have found a tunnel which supposedly leads to the buried treasures. In the tunnel they discovered the skeletons of nine workmen hired by Ali and killed by him so that he alone would know the hiding place.

The splendor of Ali's court at Janina has become almost a legend throughout the Balkans. Ambassadors of the great powers came to him and the poet Byron was his guest. He was successively the ally of Napoleon and Lord Nelson. At the peak of his career his glory outshone that of the sultan in Constantinople.

Yet Ali arose from a humble beginning. He was born in 1741 at Tepeleni, a hill village in Albania. His father, who held the hereditary office of bey of Tepeleni, was killed by neighboring chiefs who seized his territory when Ali was fourteen years old.

Ali was left in the care of his mother Khanko, a woman of extraordinary character. She herself formed a brigand band and inspired the boy with her own fierce temper.

Within a few years he regained possession of Tepeleni and took vengeance on his enemies. Then, in secure his own power, he murdered his brother and imprisoned his mother on a charge of attempting to poison him.

In 1787 Ali took part in the war against Russia and was rewarded by being made pasha of Trikala in Thessaly and Derwend-Pasha of Rumelia. His power was augmented when he succeeded in being nominated pasha of Janina.

It was only natural that his power should arouse the jealousy of the Sultan Mahmud II, who had formulated a policy of curbing the strength of the provincial pashas.

The sultan's pretext for an attack on Ali came in 1820 when the "Lion of Janina" violated the sanctity of Istanbul itself by attempting to procure the murder of an enemy in the very precincts of the sultan's palace. The bulk of the Turkish forces under Khursid Pasha were sent against him.

Although over eighty, he held his own for two years. He was forced to sue for peace in the spring of 1822.

He was granted an interview with Khursid Pasha, was received and dismissed with friendly assurances. As he turned to leave the tent he was stabbed in the back. Then his head was cut off and sent to Constantinople.

Although Ali was known to have amassed much treasure, the existence of a buried hoard was considered a legend until the recent discovery of the tunnel has stimulated efforts to find the treasure.

Uses "Crying Chair" to Cure Whining Children

"In our family of four children," writes a mother in the Parents' Magazine, "there are numerous disappointments, frequent bruises and occasional quarrels. Any of these," says she, "is likely to cause crying spells more or less prolonged, and sometimes prolonged according to the amount of sympathy and attention received. To reduce the crying to a minimum we placed a small odd chair in the corner of the sewing room and designate it as the 'crying chair.'"

"Now when anyone has to cry he is sent, or frequently goes of his own accord, to this corner by himself to cry until he is finished. The rest of the family goes quietly about its business and pays no attention to the crying one. Naturally the child soon discovers that he is wasting his time and making himself ridiculous, and the crying spells grow shorter and less frequent. In fact they have almost disappeared at our house."

Explosion Creates a New Process

Harry A. Clanton, shown above, World War veteran of North Carolina, has discovered a new glass decorating process which has been described as revolutionary. An accidental explosion of chemicals that spattered a container with a marvelous pattern of variegated colors enabled Clanton to work out the process. Three vases treated with the new coloring process were taken to Washington by the war veteran and submitted to Dr. Walter Hough, one of the curators of the Smithsonian institution, who declared he had never before seen anything like the color work on them. The designs are accidental and could not be copied.

Ex-Convict Kills Himself for Love

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The last chapter in an ex-convict's attempt to regain the happiness he once had known was written with the man's suicide in the home of the woman he had loved in vain.

Nathan Corna, forty-five, Pittsburgh, paroled last December from Marquette (Mich.) prison, where he had been sentenced for killing a woman in Detroit, killed himself in the home of Mrs. Dora Ritt, a widow. For six weeks Corna had sought to win the love of Mrs. Ritt, she said.

Corna told her of his prison sentence, Mrs. Ritt said.

"If I had loved him, I could have forgotten and forgiven—but without love, it was hopeless," she said.

Two-Purpose Dress Is in High Favor Just Now

The double duty or two-purpose dress is in high favor just now. By this we mean the type of frock that can be worn with equal success and sartorial assurance in town and country. These frocks are not too easy to find, as most frocks are designed to fit and fill a very definite niche in the wardrobe. But this season, more attention has been given to this type of frock and so we now have frocks that we can wear in town and then motor out to the country without having to change.

CELTIC LANGUAGES CYMRIC AND GAELIC

Both Irish and Welsh are living languages. They belong to the Celtic group, as English belongs to the Teutonic group. Celtic languages are divided into two sections, the Cymric and the Gaelic. The Irish language, or Gaelic of Ireland, as well as the Scots' Gaelic and Manx come within the latter category, while the Welsh belongs to the Cymric group. The languages within each of these groups resemble one another closely, yet they present many important points of difference. The Welsh has an almost perfectly phonetic spelling, while the Irish spelling is historical and consequently does not give a true picture of its present pronunciation.

Irish (Gaelic of Ireland), which is more than two thousand years old, was perhaps the only language used in Ireland before the introduction of Christianity. Then came Latin, but it did not displace Gaelic. Gaelic remained the language of the people, and the English emigrants to Ireland learned to speak it. But Cromwell's accession to power marked the end of its supremacy. Under his laws the Irish had to become English in speech, thought and religion or become deprived of educational opportunities. The inhabitants of the Pale—a strip of territory on the eastern coast of the island nearest to England—took up English, but those outside of the Pale remained Irish and consequently had fewer educational advantages.

During the last half-century many attempts have been made to restore the ancient Irish language and culture, and Irish is now, under the Free State, the official language, although the English language is equally recognized. The Irish language is a compulsory subject in the schools, the Gaelic league carries on the work of teaching adults, and many other organizations endeavor to establish the habit of speaking Irish so that it may permeate every aspect of social life. But it has not yet reached the hall or the senate; Irish is rarely, if ever, spoken in either of these two houses.

Welsh is the nearest sister tongue to Gaelic, and over a short stretch of sea is spoken by perhaps a million people. It is the language of church and chapel and produces a large crop of prose and poetry. It is the mother tongue of Lloyd George.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Polish Leader Hailed as Savior of Europe

Lord d'Abernon's tribute to Pilsudski as the real savior of Europe in 1920 has aroused much comment. The praise of the Polish leader appeared in the Gazeta Polska on the tenth anniversary of the Polish victory against the Bolsheviks. Lord d'Abernon declared that contemporary history includes few events as important as the battle of the Vistula in 1920 and not one which has been less appreciated. If the Bolsheviks had won the day the battle would have marked a turning point in European history, for Central Europe would have been thrown open to admit a flood of Bolshevik propaganda. The Bolsheviks had much vaster plans than the occupation of Poland. Many German towns were ready to proclaim a Bolshevik regime as soon as Warsaw fell. Pilsudski's strategic genius, adds the author, saved Poland, and in saving Poland saved Europe.

Desperate

The borrowing habit is not confined to the United States by any means. They actually do it in dear old London and are not in the least particular whom they borrow from.

One of the big London daily papers carries a classified advertising section, somewhat similar to the Times "personals" in which English people of high and low degree air their troubles. It was in this column that the following ad recently appeared:

"Will the persons who have borrowed Waverley Novels No. 5, and Les Misérables Vol. I from Cliveden library, kindly return same to Viscountess Astor, M. P."

One mentions in passing that the M. P. after Lady Astor's name does not stand for motion pictures nor mounted police, but member of parliament.

The Twenty-eighth infantry, under Col. Hanson E. Ely, designated for the assault, was reinforced by machine guns, engineers and other special units. Additional French artillery was sent to assist the artillery brigade of the division and particularly to suppress the hostile batteries attempting to interfere with the consolidation of the new position after it should be captured.

Yanks Splendid Under Fire.

On the morning of May 28, after a brief artillery preparation, the infantry advanced on a front of a mile and a quarter. The village of Cantigny and the adjacent heights were quickly taken, relatively heavy casualties were inflicted on the enemy and about 300 prisoners were captured. Our troops behaved splendidly and suffered but slight loss in the actual attack.

Events developing farther east, however, were seriously to complicate the success. The German assault in force against the French along the Chemin des Dames, between Soissons and Rheims, began on the morning of the twenty-seventh and was making dangerous headway. By the morning of the twenty-eighth the gains of the enemy were such that the French high command was compelled to relieve much of the reinforcing artillery behind the First division and transfer it to that front.

The enemy's artillery within range of Cantigny thus became superior to ours and was able to concentrate a terrific fire on the unsheltered troops in the captured position. His reaction against our troops was extremely violent and apparently he was determined at all cost to counteract the excellent effect the American success had produced upon the allies.

Under cover of heavy bombardment a series of counterattacks were made by the enemy, but our young infantrymen stood their ground and broke up every attempt to dislodge them. The regiment sustained severe casualties from the large caliber shells poured down upon it and had to be reinforced by a battalion each from the Eighteenth and Twenty-sixth regiments.

It was a matter of pride to the whole A. E. F. that the troops of this division, in their first battle, and in the unusually trying situation that followed, displayed the fortitude and courage of veterans, held their gains and denied the enemy the slightest advantage.

U. S. Troops at Chateau Thierry.

The alarming situation had caused General Petain to call on me on the 30th for American troops to be sent to the region of Chateau Thierry. The Third division (Dickman), then in training near Chaumont, being the only division within reach, besides the Second, was ordered to move north immediately. Dickman started his motorized machine-gun battalion over the road on the afternoon of May 30. The infantry and engineers entrained the same night, and the division's supply trains marched overland.

The first element to reach Chateau Thierry was the machine-gun battalion, which arrived the afternoon of May 31 and immediately went into action against the enemy, who then held the half of the town north of the Marne. By daylight on June 1 all available guns had been provided with cover and were in their positions, one company with eight guns, and another with nine guns about 500 yards to the east, guarding the approaches to the railroad bridge. From these positions they repulsed all attempts by the Germans to cross the Marne.

Meanwhile, as the infantry of the division came up on June 1 its battalions were put into line to reinforce the French from Chateau Thierry east to Dormans. The conduct of the machine-gun battalion in this operation was highly praised by General Petain in a citation issued later.

Stopped German Drive on Paris.

The Second division (Bundy) May 30 was near Chaumont-en-Vexin and was preparing to move northward the next day for concentration near Beauvais to relieve the First division at Cantigny. But its orders were changed late that night, and the division, moving by motor trucks, was rushed toward Maux, twenty miles northeast of Paris. Reaching there, the leading elements were hurried forward in the direction of Chateau Thierry. The roads were crowded with French troops and refugees. There was great confusion among the rapidly retreating French troops, many of them saying to our men that all was lost.

The initial deployment of the Second division was made by the Ninth infantry and the Sixth regiment of marines June 1, across the Paris highway at Lucy-le-Bocage, in front of Montreuil-aux-Lions, supposedly in support of two French divisions; but the French had orders to fall back through the American lines. In the early morning of June 2 the Twenty-third infantry, then on the left, was replaced by the French One Hundred Sixty-seventh division, and when reinforced by one battalion of the Fifth marines, the Fifth machine-gun battalion and some engineers, it was deployed to the right between the Sixth marines and the Ninth infantry, to fill a gap in the French line, and by June 5 the entire division became engaged.

Considering that this was its first experience in battle, this division made a splendid defense, repulsed all German attacks, and by its timely arrival effectively stopped the German advance on Paris.

Bringing Relief to French Poilu.

The sudden appearance and dramatic entrance of the Second and Third divisions into the shattered and broken fighting lines and their dash, and courage in battle produced a favorable effect upon the French poilu. It must have been with a decided feeling of relief that the worn and tired French army, retreating before vastly superior numbers, caught sight of Americans arriving in trucks at Meaux and marching thence on foot, hats off, hurrying eagerly forward to battle. And the Germans, who had been filled with propaganda deprecating the American effort and the quality of their training, must have been surprised and doubtless rather disconcerted by meeting strong resistance by Americans on different portions of this active battle front, especially when our troops advanced at once to meet the attack in open combat.

This defeat of the French furnished the second striking confirmation of the wisdom of training troops for open warfare.

Replies to French Criticism.

After the success of our troops we were in no mood to listen to self-appointed critics. M. Andre Tardieu called on me upon my return to Paris and undertook to point out that our staff was inefficient and offered criticisms of our organization. As this was something he could not possibly know about, I replied that he had got an entirely erroneous impression and that our staff was second to none in either ability or efficiency.

I advised him that we had quite enough of this sort of thing from the French, either military or civilian, and suggested that if his people would cease troubling themselves so much about our affairs and attend more strictly to their own we should all get along much better.

I did not fail to appreciate M. Tardieu's ability and his helpfulness on many occasions, but this constant inclination on the part of a certain element among the French to assume a superiority that did not exist then or at any later period, added to the attempts of some of them to dictate, had reached the limit.

CHAPTER XLIII

The sixth session of the supreme war council was convened June 1, 1918. The important matter of further shipment of American troops was taken up.

As already indicated, it was my opinion that neither the character of the fast as possible to carry on the battle to the end, and that our program had been seriously interrupted by concessions already made.

I called attention to the fact that the railways all over France were on the point of breaking down for lack of efficient operators and of skilled workmen to repair rolling stock; that our ports would be hopelessly blocked unless we could improve the railways; this his plan would leave us 200,000 men short to complete combat units and fill up special organizations that were absolutely necessary in the S. O. S., and, finally, that the restriction of our shipments to infantry and machine-gun units would be a very dangerous and short-sighted policy.

To much of this he paid little or no attention and replied that all these things could be postponed.

Wanted Wilson Informed.

Graeme Thompson, British expert on transportation and supply, came into the room at this point with Mr. Lloyd George and General Sir Henry Wilson, and took part in the discussion. Mr. Lloyd George said he thought President Wilson would be deeply interested to get General Foch's view of the situation, and added that as America had no prime minister present he thought it would be inconvenient for us to make a decision, but that this subject should be brought before the whole council.

I then called attention to a cable from Secretary of War Baker, already quoted, showing that the President had been much embarrassed by representations made to him personally by the French and British ambassadors, and had suggested that the matter might be settled by a conference between General Foch and myself. I pointed out that the cable did not mention the supreme war council, and I again stated my opposition to making the subject one of general discussion by all allied representatives and their staffs.

I did not fail to point out further that the President was trusting my judgment in this matter. As nothing was being accomplished and hoping the number of participants in the discussion might be limited, I proposed we adjourn until the following day.

Pershing Again Answers Foch.

The next afternoon when we assembled M. Clemenceau was waiting for the rest of us, and instead of there being fewer conferees the number had increased. Not unlike the situation at Abbeville a month before, everybody was keyed up, and, as we had expected, the question had to be fought all over again.

General Foch supported by M. Clemenceau and Lloyd George, wanted nothing but infantry and machine gunners in June and July, to which I was strongly opposed, again insisting that sufficient importance had not been at-troops to be sent over nor their disposition was within the province of the council to decide, but that these questions should be determined according to circumstances and after discussion with the allies.

So I objected to their consideration by the council, as such, and suggested a meeting outside the council, which was approved.

Accordingly, in the late afternoon, General Foch, Lord Milner, British war minister, General Weygand and I, with Colonels Conner and Boyd, met in the premier's room. General Foch began by stating the serious condition of the allies and proposed the continued shipment from America of nothing but infantry and machine-gun units in June and July, in effect 250,000 in each month. Every one realized the gravity of the allied situation as strongly as he did, but, as previously and persistently contended by me, there were two sides to the question.

Foch Becomes Excited.

I was prepared to make some concessions and stated my views, but neither facts nor arguments seemed to make any impression. General Foch especially was very positive and earnest, and, in fact, became quite excited, waving his hands and repeating: "The battle, the battle; nothing else counts."

With equal emphasis I urged that we must build up our organization as tached to my reasons for the necessity of the auxiliary troops omitted in June.

Foch resorted to his often-repeated question whether I was willing to take the risk, to which I replied very positively that I was ready to assume any responsibility my proposal might entail, but that I must have a greater proportion of other troops to keep the American organization from going to smash.

Men Called in May Untrained.

Other objections, which the allies apparently overlooked, were that the untrained men called out in May could not possibly be ready for service until a considerable time after arrival, and that neither the French nor the British could provide all the equipment and land transportation they would need. In accordance with my program, I was willing to agree to the shipment of fully trained infantry not needed for the instruction of new drafts, but felt that this point should be left to the judgment of the secretary of war.

Mr. Lloyd George then concluded that as a consequence July would be a blank, and in a rather dejected tone he said the allies were in a sense in the hands of the United States. I spoke of the generous and chivalrous attitude of President Wilson, and said all they could do was to acquaint him with their needs and call upon him to come to their aid, more particularly to the aid of France at the period of the most terrible extremity that she had yet encountered.

CHAPTER XLIV

Further conversation at the session of the supreme war council showed the uncertainty in the minds of the allies. Prime Minister Lloyd George, reverting to losses, said that before the great German attack in May he had been informed positively the Germans had only 400,000 replacements left, and that now, after the most violent fighting, in which it was reported the Germans had suffered very heavy losses, they still had more than 300,000 replacements.

The allies also had 300,000, but it was now contended, he said, that the British army was on the decline while that of the enemy was not.

Mr. Lloyd George asked if that could be cleared up, to which General Foch replied that it was because the enemy managed better, and he went on to say that Germany, with a population of 68,000,000 could maintain 204 divisions, while Great Britain, with 46,000,000 inhabitants, could keep up only 43. It had been stated that the British counted on keeping up 53 divisions, but that ten of them would be practically American.

Then, in response to a further question by Mr. Lloyd George, General Foch said he could not pretend to say where Germany procured her replacements; possibly it might be from prisoners returned from Russia.

Three Map Program.

After further argument on discrepancies of various figures, and insistence by General Foch that the number of divisions be maintained, the consideration of the transportation of American troops in June and July was resumed. The discussion having reached an impasse, it was suggested that Lord Milner, British war minister, General Foch and I should undertake to draw up a program.

In the consideration of the question by us the point of my contention was won when General Weygand, who was Foch's principal adviser, remarked that it would be as well to leave the new drafts to be trained at home a month or so longer.

Although my arguments had failed to make any impression on General Foch, he at once approved Weygand's suggestion.

Agreement on U. S. Troops.

With this out of the way we soon drew up the agreement embodied in the following cablegram sent to Washington June 2:

"(a) For June: First, absolute priority shall be given the transportation of 170,000 combatant troops (viz., six divisions without artillery, ammunition trains or supply trains, amounting to 128,000 men and 44,000 replacements for combat troops); second, 25,400 men for the service of railway, of which 13,400 have been asked by the French minister of transportation; third, the balance to be troops of categories to be determined by the commander in chief, American expeditionary forces.

"(b) For July: First, absolute priority for the shipment of 140,000 combatant troops of the nature defined above, four divisions minus artillery, etc., amounting to 84,000 men plus 56,000 replacements; second, the balance of the 250,000 to consist of troops to be designated by the commander in chief, American expeditionary forces.

"(c) It is agreed that if available tonnage in either month allows the transportation of a larger number of men than 250,000 the excess tonnage will be employed in the transportation of combat troops as defined above.

"(d) We recognize that the combatant troops to be dispatched in July may have to include troops with insufficient training, but we consider the present emergency to justify a temporary and exceptional departure by the United States from sound principles of training, especially as a similar course is being followed by France and Great Britain. (Signed)

"FOCH, MILNER, PERSHING."

The prime ministers cabled President Wilson expressing their thanks for the promptness of American aid in the present emergency.

Yanks at Chateau Thierry.

The Second and Third divisions, facing the Germans near Chateau Thierry, had made their places in line secure, giving heart to the French, who were trying to stabilize their own positions around the newly formed salient. We shall hear more of these two divisions later. Although fully taken for granted by all of us, it was none the less gratifying to see these divisions, for the first time in the line, acquit themselves so well.

En route to Chaumont we motored eastward through Montmirail, passing long columns of French refugees fleeing from their homes, many on foot, men and women with bundles on their backs, leading the smaller children, driving their stock before them and hauling in various types of conveyance the few remaining worldly goods they were able to take with them. Almost indescribable were many similar scenes as reported by our troops as they came up to reinforce the retiring French.

WELL HERE IS A BOOST FOR ORLAND PARK

Orland Park, Ill. Aug. 10, 1931 To the Editor:

When anyone sets out to criticize our town, they should make sure that they paint a complete picture and not merely point out the bad side.

Orland Park is going thru a period of growth which is experienced by many growing metropolitan towns. The old order of things is gradually, but surely, giving away to a new and improved order. There has been a complete change of view point in the town during the last few years, brought on largely by improved transportation and a higher standard of living; and, also the physical side of the town has not changed much, many of us believe that the next period of prosperity will bring us many improvements. Among these should be better roads and sidewalks, more stores and perhaps a new village hall.

However, the town moves slowly and what has been done should be appreciated, that which is yet to be done should be worked for.
